High-quality Colombian cocoa, grown for peace

Peace is being rebuilt in the heart of the Colombian countryside, peace that grows from fine-flavor cacao. This is one of the most important missions the Rural Development Agency (ADR, for its Spanish acronym), is undertaking, from a direct mandate from our Colombian President Gustavo Petro: to help cacao small producers from regions that are overcoming the armed conflict and illicit crops thrive with their cacao production, sell abroad and build a better future for their families.

The reason we are here, at Chocoa Amsterdam, and the products we bring here represent more than the country's finest cacao, renowned for its unique quality and delicate aroma that captivates Europe's most discerning palates. They also embody the ADR commitment to peacebuilding in Colombia, supporting crop substitution programs by planting fine-flavor cacao and promoting its trade, nationally and internationally, without intermediaries.

The Cocoa Route reflects that vision, where farmers and small producers become the country's best representatives to the world. Led by César Pachón, the Rural Development Agency efforts has made possible for rural organizations to export high-quality, fine-flavor cacao that meets the standards and preferences of international buyers and global gastronomy, while earning a dignified income for their families and communities.

You can meet them here at Chocoa Amsterdam: small-scale farmer organizations, Indigenous communities, and Afro-Colombian producers, supported by the Rural Development Agency, who proudly present the world's finest aroma cacao, with a seal of peace: high-quality Colombian cacao, grown for peace.
